Games are for everyone!

CREATING AN ACCESSIBLE GAMING EVENT

Who we are

- Angie Brunk
  - Research on games and accessibility
  - Human Factors Masters
- Dan Ireton
  - Long time game geek
  - Research on games in education and game design

How we got started

- Angie had a background in accessible design and some work on games and accessibility
  - Started by researching active learning activities and accessibility
- Dan is a long-time game researcher
  - Worked with web accessibility and saw applicability

What we hoped to gain

- · Show off our innovation lab
- Create a great gaming event
- Get people to think about accessibility
- · Creating connection between libraries, gaming and accessibility

Types of games

- Social Deduction
- Trick Taking
- Narrative
- Polyominos
- Worker Placement
- Roll and move
- Party game/ casual game

Types of Gamers

Barriers to accessibility

- There is no universally accessible game!
- Barriers
  - · Pieces are too small to grasp
  - · Hard to see
  - · Game type or rules do not play well with a neurotype or cognitive disability
  - · Games does not work well in ASL
  - · Information is conveyed only by color
  - Hard for a disabled person to conceal information
- Disabled people have differing and sometimes conflicting needs
- The gaming community has known issues with gatekeeping, which strike harder on disabled people

Playtesting methodology

- Play at least a few complete turns of a game
- Look at obvious accessibility barriers
- Converse as a group after we have played a few turns

Why you should playtest

- You cannot explain a game without playing it first
- You cannot find the accessibility barriers without playing it first
- It's a great way to teach about and think about accessibility
- It builds community
- It builds connections outside the library
- Psycho-social moratorium
- Facilitates learning games from multiple perspectives

Modifications

- 3-D printing better tokens
  - Tactile tokens
- Adding a neutral narrator
- Providing adaptive equipment
  - Magnification
  - Card holders

Make vs. Buy

- How complex is the problem?
- What resources do you have?

Communication

- Good descriptions of games and/or modifications allow people to decide what games meet their needs
  - Some people do not like ambiguous or changing rules
  - Creating a common world can be challenging for new groups
  - · Social deduction games might not work for people who are neurodivergent
- Encourage people to bring and teach their own games

Sample Game description

- Fluxx: If you don't like unpredictable things, skip this game. If you like a quick and wild ride, pick up this quick card game with a variety of themes to appeal to everyone's taste.
- Avalon: Who among those sitting at the table is the traitor? If you enjoy gossip, speculation and smack talking, enjoy a round of this social deduction game! We've created tactile tokens so that more people can enjoy backstabbing and intrigue.

Game Day Set-up

- Welcome table at one of the main entrances to the library
- Ringers at several tables
- Tables arranged from lowest commitment to things requiring more commitment
- Table signs with game descriptions

What worked

- Numbers were good
  - DAS 100
- Engagement
  - Student's reaction
  - Cards Against Humanity
  - Surprise hits
- Set-up scheme

What we might change

- Volunteer recruitment and reminders
  - More nagging
- Welcome desk staffing
- Flexibility in volunteer placement
- The audacity of some people
